Benefits of a walkable community

Building and supporting a community that supports walking is good for people, the environment and the economy.

Health

People who walk lower their risk of obesity, diabetes and heart disease. Walkable communities provide greater opportunities for people to walk and be active in their neighbourhood.

Environment

When we walk instead of driving short distances we help keep the air and water clean.

Traffic and Congestion

When more people walk, there is less traffic. This means driving is safer and roads cost less to maintain.

Community

When people walk, they feel more a part of their community. They feel connected to the places where they live, work and play and more aware of the environment. When people are out walking and cycling, the streets are safer.

Economy

As people stay healthy, health care costs less. When communities are well-designed and compact, more people can get to the employment, education and social services they need.
